

Celebrating 50 years of specialist Interior and Garden Design education

Inchbald School of Design, founded 1960

Inchbald is the leading private college of design in England, specialising in Interior Design and Garden Design, and offering post Graduate and Master qualifications as well as providing a wide selection of full and part-time study courses varying in length from five days to two years.

The policies established by Inchbald over fifty years of specialist education, together with exceptional standards of teaching, have served to shape and develop the structure and profile of the two professions exclusively served by the college, namely Interior Design and Garden Design.

Distinguished graduates around the world bear witness to the excellence for which Inchbald has become famous since its' doors were opened in 1960 by Interior Designer Jacqueline Inchbald and it is a natural progression that many of its courses are now available online to students who, wishing to study at home, can avail themselves of Inchbald's exceptional design education, together with flexible hours and outstanding tutorial facilities.

In 1999 the University of Wales validated Inchbald MA programmes in Architectural Interior Design and Garden Design, an achievement for the School which also reinforced the professional status of its graduates, and was particularly welcomed by the British Interior Design Association and the Society of Garden Designers, both organisations with which Inchbald has close links.

All Inchbald courses, whether inhouse or online, have a vocational agenda encompassing the full range of information relevant to the two professions. The Annual Student Exhibition of Work held in mid July in the Cadogan Hall, near Sloane Street, gives the public an opportunity to meet graduate designers and to judge Inchbald expertise and values at first hand.

"Inchbald taught me how to communicate my ideas effectively and not just to think of spaces in visual terms but how they must feel and function."

Vice-Principal Alan Hughes says: "It is so good to see students' progress in both educational and professional terms. Laura's Botanist Restaurant, her first solo design, is an achievement of which she can be justifiably proud. It is wonderful to see her confidence high and her hard work rewarded."

"10 years ago I left a career in the city with a sigh of relief. I wanted to be a designer, I wanted to work with plants and Inchbald opened the door to that new world for me. The course was easily the most intellectually and creatively stimulating thing I have ever done. I would not have achieved my current success without hard work, some luck and most importantly, the firm grounding I got from Inchbald.

I have done 4 gardens at Chelsea winning 3 Gold medals and 1 Silver-Gilt."
